A certain product once made Milwaukee (more) famous, so sure as Schlitz begat Schlitz Light, new product lines were soon on the way:

(1) Two products that spun off were each named for a pair of local ingredients. In 13 checked squares in the grid you must enter either a specific bigram or a specific trigram; each represents the manner of pairing for one of these products. In each clue for an answer containing one of these squares, one word must have a letter “spun off” (that is, the word must be reversed and the letter removed) before solving. For example, a clue like “Understand convention's lager” might be converted to “Understand convention's real” (spinning off a G), giving an answer of CONSTRUE (CON'S TRUE). The spun-off letters for each manner of pairing, in order of the squares from top to bottom in the grid, will identify the corresponding ingredients.

(2) Three other products traveled greater distances, requiring eight “clues” to be specially packaged. Four of these “clues” are only half-clues, which must be concatenated in two pairs to form cryptic clues for two of the products; each product will be entered in the spaces for its paired “clues.” The other four “clues” each consist of two clues, with the clue for the entry on the outside and a clue for another, three-letter, term on the inside. For example, a “clue” like “Drinks mostly Guinness beer with birds” might have an outside clue of “Drinks with birds” cluing SWALLOWS, and an inside clue of “mostly Guinness beer” cluing ALE (ALEC, curtailed). These three-letter terms must be concatenated (in clue order) in two pairs, and each pair put between the two letters that start and end each inner clue (which each begin and end with the same pair of letters), to name the third product.

(3) The remaining 22 clues work perfectly normally. When the grid is complete, use the first and last letter of each such clue as grid coordinates and note the letter in the indicated square. These letters, in clue order, will describe (but not name) the main product from which all those in (1) and (2) derived. This product, in turn, was derived from an earlier product with much wider distribution. If you highlight all the squares that were indicated (some will be hit twice) you will get the name and logo of this earlier product.
