

Goddessy by Ucaoimhu

When the ale-loving goddess Hathor was about to go to Machu Picchu to see the weirdly rectangular architecture, she first faced the divine (and rewarding) mysteries of a different structure. As for you:

(1) In half of the clues, you must change a single letter to some other letter before solving. The letters before changing, in clue order, will spell two hints given near the structure; the letters after changing will spell the phrase she replied with.

(2) Fourteen of the other clues work normally, but each of their answers includes one or more “special” squares in the grid, each of which holds one of two (roughly) equivalent terms. Reading the first letters of all the clues whose answers include squares with the shorter term, and then doing the same for the longer term, will tell you what the structure was.

(3) The five remaining clues each contain an extra word, which must be removed before solving. These words, in order, describe Hathor, and also clue one final word to conclude this puzzle in an appropriate manner.
